On the following pages appears the records of the more outstanding exploits of Cumberland County men. We regret that these are only a few of many valorous and unusual experiences of the servicemen of our county. Undoubtedly, there are many others whose record would reveal the same traits of stubborn courage and valor that underlies the stories following.

THE STORY OF LIEUTENANT HAROLD M. MASSIE, TOLEDO, ILLINOIS

JUNGLE ADVENTURE

By Sidney James

Excerpts from above captioned story, reprinted by permission from LIFE June 28, Copyright Time Inc. 1943.

"Three Martin Marauders took off on a bombing mission from Seven Mile Airdrome in New Guinea. Their destination was an airport at Rabaul, on the northeastern tip of New Britain Island, where they were to drop oil incendiary bombs on a concentration of Jap planes. It was a routine mission. IMOGENE VII was flying in the right-wing position. Her crew was inexperienced. Co-pilot Eugene Wallace had been out only twice before against the enemy, while Lieutenant Harold L. Massie was starting on his first trip as first pilot. The rest of the crew that morning were as new as the war they were fighting in.

The flight was completely without incident, even to the point that the planes swooped down to 1,500 feet for their bombing run over the Jap Airport. Just as Intelligence had reported Jap planes lined the runways. Two enemy bombers were taking off as they roared toward the target, and it was obvious that they had taken the Japs by surprise. Three trains of bombs hurtled earthward.

But the Japs weren't going to let their planes go for nothing. The sky, bright now with the midmorning sun, was filled with belated ack-ack. IMOGENE VII lurched. Hughes stumbled into the cockpit from the navigator's compartment. "I'm hit," he said, holding his bloodstained side. As Wallace broke open a medicine kit, the plane dipped violently to the right. Down, down went the plane; at 900 feet it was righted momentarily. When it was apparent that one motor wouldn't hold the load, Massie gave the order to jettison everything movable. Lighter by a good 2,000 pounds, the plane continued to lose altitude nevertheless. "Prepare for a crash!" was the only order Massie could give, for there was no longer altitude enough to parachute. With a mighty thud the plane pancaked into the waves. Battered about like so much debris, members of the crew began popping through hatches that the angry waters had broken open. Soon there were six bloody heads bobbing in the blue water beside the half-submerged plane. In another second the tail raised skyward. The struggling men heard anguished cries of "Please!" Then the plane plunged under and was seen no more.

Each man began counting the heads about him. Massie, Wallace, Hughes, King, Bordner, Swan, but no Dukes; no Wlenski. It was they whose fearful cries had come from the plane. Little Joe Dukes had had his first and last airplane ride.

All but Massie had inflated their life vests, so they were at least able to keep afloat without much difficulty. A strong swimmer, Harold Massie struck out for shore, some three-quarters of a mile away. His goal was a broad beach that spread out before a clump of thatched huts set under a row of stately palms. The village seemed at first to be deserted, but as he drew closer a swarm of near-naked natives rushed out of the huts to the water's edge. They were young and old, male and female, and they waved their arms, jumped and ran excitedly around, screaming and whooping. Presently some order came out of the chaos ashore. Two of the natives launched an outrigger canoe and began paddling.

On the fourth day Massie decided to make a trip to the place where Wallace had been told they would find the other white man. He was gone 14 days and the boys back at the village were uneasy about him but he was, nevertheless, only one of their worries by this time. Bordner had taken a decided turn for the worse, and Hughes and Swan were unable to get to their feet.

On June 10, 14 days after he had left, Massie returned. Wallace and King ran to him, grasped his hand and thumped his shoulders in greeting. Tattered and torn and worn and gaunt from his trip, he was, nevertheless, the best sight they had seen for days. Quickly returning their greetings, he handed a cloth-wrapped bundle to Wallace. "Don't unwrap this, it's worth its weight in gold. Put it away before the natives see it," he whispered. When he had paid off the luluai with 14 slings or shillings for the services of two natives who accompanied him, he brought the two copra sacks the natives were lugging.

As they sat in the twilight gloom, Massie emptied the copra sacks of the useful items the man had given him. The rain continued to beat down on the palm-tree fronds and the damp chill came into their fragile hut, but there was warmth in Massie's return and the new knowledge he had brought to them, and the lost fliers slept soundly that night.

In the ensuing days they scraped off their faces with the razor blades, took soapy baths in the surf and sang to the natives who gathered in front of their hut. It was high entertainment for the natives. They learned to put the clap-clap-clap in "Deep In The Heart of Texas" and they managed "helliva, helliva jeer" as the second line of the Georgia Teck classic, which was by far their favorite. Sometimes after these serenades, Wallace, Massie and King used to stroll down to the beach and look at the moon. They would see its path as a broad, shimmering highway leading to their homes and they would imagine themselves taking quick trips over it. Massie and King would nostalgically communicate with their brides--girls they had married in the rush of going off to war and had hardly gotten a chance to know.

On June 30, it was decided that they must reduce the number of visiting mouths that the villagers had to feed by three, and Massie, King and Wallace left the village. This was 38 days after the crash. Their destination was the hide-out of Massie's white friend. Their purpose was the scout possibilities for the future. Hughes, Swan and Bordner, the latter still down with his injuries, promised to try to stay in the village until September.

THEY ARE DISCOVERED BY JAPS

On the third day out, as they were walking into a small village, Massie collapsed on the trail. Carried into the house, he was utterly helpless. He had neither a chill nor a fever, nor any specific complaint, but he could not eat and he could scarcely move a muscle. The natives made a walking bed, a blanket slung from two carrying poles and 15 of them carried Massie to their destination.

They arrived at their destination on July 9. Massie now seemed to be entirely different. When their white friend saw him he said: "You'll have to cheer him up. He'll quit. I saw an Australian soldier die that way. Nothing much wrong with him, just quit living." In a few days it was obvious that Massie was not going to quit, though his progress was slow in the face of a new menace that the fliers were meeting for the first time--tropical ulcers.

On July 18 the natives ran to the village to tell them that the Japs knew they were there and were on their way. For the next three days they were forced to spend their nights on hastily thrown-up lean-tos on the trail, for the natives were further apart in the bush than on the coast. The most disquieting difference between the bush country and the coastal country they had come from was that it was a country of villages in which they were not wanted. Massie and King, still in walking condition though many pounds lighter than their normal weight, decided to push on again. Thus on July 27 they departed from their companions for the last time.

THEY LOSE MASSIE, KING AND SWAN

Wallace decided to strike out for help and a day later, he met Hughes and Bordner. "Did you hear about Massie and King?" they asked as they rushed up to him. "No, what happened?"

said Wallace. "The Japs got them," Hughes said. "All we could find out was that they got to the beach and some natives they stayed with turned them over to the Japs."

(NOTE) Gene Wallace, Marvin Hughes and Dale Bordner were rescued and this story is based upon their experiences.

The Story of James Sherrick, Greenup, Illinois.

I went through the war as a Reconnaissance officer in Battery A., 160th Field Artillery Battalion, 45th Infantry Division with rank of First Lieutenant. The 45th went into action, myself included, on July 9, 1943 in Sicily. Our next operation was September 10, (?) on the Salerno Beachhead in Italy. In January of 1944, the division made a support landing on the beachhead at Anzio, Italy. I was captured on February 18, 1944 on this same beachhead by a German unit. This ended my combat experience. I was in various camps during the next few months, Verona, Italy for three months, Austria for three months, and Poland for seven months. In January, 1945, a Russian column overtook the German company that was attempting to move us to Central Germany. Most of this group were prisoners. I, with the rest of these prisoners was evacuated. I was sent to Russia and then back to the States in April, 1945.

I was awarded the Silver Star for action near Persano, Italy. For the day I was captured I was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross and Purple Heart.

The Story of John William Furry, Toledo, Illinois.

Bill enlisted December 7, 1942 in the United States Navy Reserve at Effingham and was sent to St. Louis on December 13, 1942, for induction into the service. He returned home and was sent to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station on December 29. Following boot training he chose the medical corps and remained at Great Lakes until February 9, 1944, when he was assigned to Camp Lejeune, North Carolina.

In August, 1944, Bill was sent to the Hawaiian Islands and there he was attached to the 23rd Marines, 4th Marine Division. On February 19, this division landed on Iwo Jima, where Bill heroically attended the wounded from D Day until his death.

On March 4, 1945, while attending the wounded a large mortar shell landed near by and one of the fragments hit him, causing instant death. He was buried in the 4th Marine cemetery on Iwo Jima until the body was brought back to Toledo.

Bill was posthumously awarded the Presidential Citation, the Purple Heart, and the Victory Medal.

The Story of Sergeant John Mock, Toledo, Illinois (now of Greenup, Illinois).

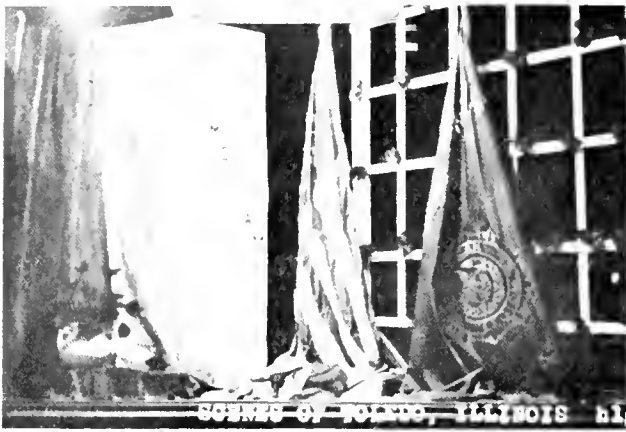

I was inducted into the army November 27, 1941 at Camp Grant, Illinois. They sent me to Camp Croft, South Carolina for basic training. I joined the 34th Infantry Division at Fort Dix, New Jersey and sailed overseas with Company One of the 135th Regiment, April 29, 1942. I landed in Northern Ireland May 13, 1942 and made the North African invasion November 8, 1942 at Algiers, North Africa. I fought all the way across North Africa and received the Silver Star March 6, 1943 at Salerno. I was in the invasion of Italy at Salerno and campaigned all the way from Southern Italy. I was wounded in the left hand at Casino, Italy, on February 3, 1944 as a staff sergeant spent seventeen days in a hospital, but later rejoined the same company. I was made platoon sergeant, going into Anzio Beachhead in Italy in March. I was sent back to the States on rotation plan May 11, 1944 and landed in the United States June 9, 1944. I was then assigned to the Welch convalescent Hospital at Daytona Beach, Florida as a sergeant major. I was stationed there until discharged at Fort McPherson, Georgia on September 4, 1945.

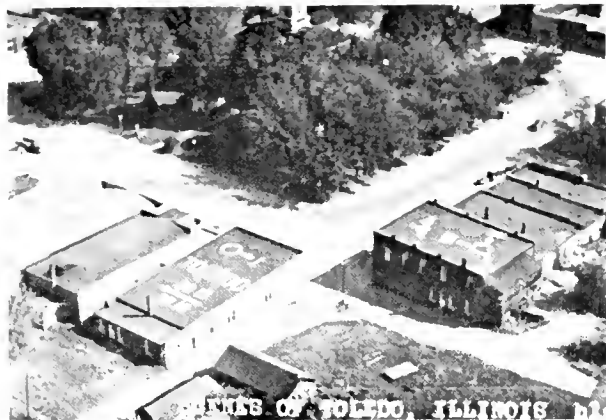

The decorations and citations received were: Silver Star Medal, Purple Heart, Good Conduct Medal, European-African-Middle Eastern Theatre Ribbon with four Bronze Stars, American Defense Service Ribbon, Combat Infantryman's Badge and Distinguished Unit Badge.
